MAYOR'S MESSAGE

Dear Community,

It is hard to believe that October is here. It is a busy month for our City. This month the city council starts its review of the proposed budget. If you would like to see what the issues are and or provide feedback on key initiatives you feel the City needs to focus on, then please attend one of our council meetings. A list of the upcoming budget meetings is also listed in this newsletter.

On a different note, October is one of my favorite months. Who does not love trick or treating? This year the Chamber of Commerce will be organizing the annual downtown event. It is on the 31st. If you are a big or little kid at heart, visit downtown and have some fun. I will be passing out candy at City Hall and I hope you will stop by.

Technology is something our City is working on improving. This month the City will be rolling out its new website. The site will be easier to use and have additional features to help keep you informed on city projects, council meetings and workshops, and events. In a couple of weeks, please check it out. www.duvallwa.gov.

Finally, this is a great month to be preparing for the winter. It can range from checking your food storages to making sure the water and food are still good in your emergency kits, to what my wife recently did by replacing her tires and brakes.

Enjoy the month.

Sincerely,

Will Ibershof

GET PREPARED

No one should live in fear of what “could” happen, but we shouldn’t live in denial or become complacent either. While the weather is still pleasant and kids are returning to school, take time to prepare for emergencies in your home, school, organizations, businesses, and communities. Follow these three easy steps for making preparedness a part of your everyday life:

Step 1: Implement simple preparedness activities

Start by learning more about local hazards and what you can do to plan for them. Then involve your entire family in making a plan, building a kit, and helping others so that when disasters strike, you'll be ready.

For your kids specifically:

- Share age-appropriate information about what they can do to stay safe in an emergency;
- Keep your emergency contact information up-to-date at your child’s school or day care;
- Find out where children will be taken if they have to evacuate the school;
- Ask if they store enough food, water and other supplies in case they have to “shelter-in-place”;
- Designate a friend or relative to pick up your children in an emergency and make sure the school knows who that person is; and
- Ask how they will communicate with families during a crisis.
- Visit FEMA's new Ready Kids site for valuable tools to help your children and teachers prepare for emergencies.

Step 2: Pledge to prepare

Register as a community preparedness coalition member at ready.gov/pledge. Members have access to the online community, resources, and tools available to help get you and your family prepared for an emergency.

Step 3: Take a free online preparedness course

Developed in partnership with the Emergency Management Institute and in consultation with faith-based and community partners, FEMA's "Is-909 Community Preparedness: Implementing Simple Activities for Everyone" training course introduces you to a program for promoting individual and community preparedness through simple and engaging activities. The course is free, available online, and is designed for anyone to use in coordination with your local emergency management office.
